THE OUTREACH SWIPE FILE

Exactly What To Say

Copy, tweak, send. Cold calls, DMs, emails, and follow-ups. Never stare at a blank message again.

00 How to actually use these

These templates work because they're built on one idea: reference something specific, name a real problem, and ask for something small. Don't paste them robotically. Swap in the real detail you found about that business, or they read like spam and die.

- The bracketed bits are yours to fill. [business], [the gap you spotted], [their city]. That specific detail is the difference between a reply and the trash.
- Short beats clever. Owners are busy. Get to the point. Every extra sentence lowers your reply rate.
- Ask for a conversation, not the sale. The goal of every message is a quick call. That's it. Don't try to close in a DM.

MAKE THESE YOURS

After you've sent 50 to 100, you'll notice which lines get replies. Rewrite these in your own voice using what worked. These are your training wheels, not your permanent script.

01 Cold call scripts

Scariest, fastest. The goal is not to sell on the call, it's to book a real call. Keep it short, be a human, get off the phone with a next step.

The opener

YOU SAY

"Hey, is this [owner name]? ... Hey [name], my name's [your name], I'll be quick, I'm not trying to sell you anything crazy. I was actually looking at [business] online, you've got a killer reputation, [X reviews / been around forever]. But I noticed [the specific gap]. Is that something you've thought about at all?"

If they engage

YOU SAY

"Yeah, that's exactly what I help businesses like yours fix. I don't want to eat your whole day on this call. Could we grab 15 minutes [this week] so I can show you what I mean? I'll come with something specific to your business, not a generic pitch."

If they're busy / blow you off

YOU SAY

"Totally get it, you're running a business. Can I shoot you a quick text or email with what I'm talking about, and if it's interesting we find 15 minutes later? What's the best number or email?"

REAL TALK

You will suck at this for the first ten calls. Everyone does. Your voice shakes, you forget the words. Do it anyway. Call eleven is night and day from call one. There's no way around the reps.

02 DM / Instagram scripts

Lower pressure, great for businesses active on social. Reference their actual content. Keep it casual, keep it short, ask a real question.

Opener, soft

DM

"Hey [name], been seeing [business] pop up, [genuine specific compliment about their work/content]. Quick question, are you guys handling [inquiries / bookings / after-hours leads] okay right now, or does stuff slip through when you're busy on jobs?"

Opener, direct

DM

"Hey [name], love what you're doing at [business]. Noticed [the gap, e.g. 'you're running ads but there's no easy way to book from the page']. I help [industry] businesses fix exactly that. Worth a quick chat? No pressure either way."

They reply "what is it?"

DM

"Short version: I set up [the fix, e.g. 'a system that catches and responds to leads instantly, even after hours'] so you stop losing people who reach out when you can't get to the phone. Easier to show than explain, got 15 min this week?"

03 Email scripts

Easy to send, easy to ignore. Best for volume and follow-up. Subject line does most of the work, keep the body tight.

Subject lines that get opened

- "Quick question about [business]"
- "[business] + a gap I noticed"
- "Are you losing after-hours leads?"
- "[their city] [industry], quick one"

The cold email

EMAIL BODY

"Hey [name],

Came across [business], your reviews are genuinely impressive, clearly you do great work.

One thing stood out though: [the specific gap]. Businesses like yours usually lose a real number of leads that way without ever seeing it.

I help [industry] businesses fix exactly that. If it's worth 15 minutes, I'll show you specifically what I'd do for [business], no generic pitch.

Worth a quick call this week?

[your name] / [Elenos] / [link]"

KEEP IT HUMAN

No corporate voice. No "I hope this email finds you well." Write like you'd talk. Owners can smell a mass-blast template from a mile off, and specificity is your only defense.

04 Follow-ups (where the money is)

Most deals happen after the first message got ignored. People aren't rejecting you, they're busy and they forgot. Follow up like a professional, not a stalker. Space them out, add a little value or a nudge each time, then let it go.

Follow-up 1 (2-3 days later)

MESSAGE

"Hey [name], floating this back up in case it got buried. Still happy to show you what I mean for [business], 15 min whenever works."

Follow-up 2 (4-5 days after that)

MESSAGE

"Hey [name], last time I'll bug you on this, promise. If [the problem] isn't a priority right now, no worries at all. If it is, I'm around this week. Either way, keep crushing it at [business]."

THE "BREAKUP" WORKS

That last one, giving them an easy out, gets more replies than any pushy follow-up ever will. People respond to "no worries" way more than "just checking in!!" for the fifth time.

YOUR MOVE

Track your outreach somewhere simple. Who, what channel, when, what they said. You'll follow up more consistently and you'll see your own patterns, which lines land, which industries reply. That data makes you dangerous.
